FOR OPERATORS WITH BETTER THINGS TO DO

Your next hire could be Compound.

An AI employee for construction and plant businesses. It answers your clients the way you would, works through the admin, and when it gets stuck it emails a manager, like any good employee.

Think of it as a very eager graphic designer, paralegal and computer whiz rolled into one, who never goes home.

What it takes off your plate

Email and clients

Reads the inbox, replies to routine questions with the whole thread in view, and flags what needs you.

Dockets and hours

Matches dockets to jobs, checks the hours, and asks the crew member when something is missing.

Invoices and bills

Prepares invoice drafts from verified dockets and gets bills into your accounts for review.

Documents and filing

Files approved documents in the right folder with consistent names and a link to the original.

Contracts, prepared

Pulls out payment terms, deadlines and commitments so you arrive at your lawyer ready.

The next move

Every morning, a short list of what matters now, with the source details one tap away.

You stay in control

Choose draft-only, where it prepares and you approve, or set rules for the routine work you want handled on its own. Sensitive financial and legal decisions always keep human review. Your systems stay yours: no passwords handed over, and every action links back to its source.

An ordinary day, handled

Illustrative example.

6:00 pm A client asks where their quote is. They get a clear reply straight away, written with the whole history of the job in view.

After hours A docket arrives by email. By morning it is matched to the job and the hours are checked.

7:00 am One detail is missing, so the crew member is asked for it, not you.

8:00 am You open a short list: two drafts to approve, one decision to make. The rest is already done.
